

A Nick-of-Time Sale of

Women's Silk Gloves

This sale offers choice from hundreds of pairs of Silk Gloves of standard manufacture, including the famous "Kaysers" make, at prices that should tempt you to buy a big supply for future use.

Long and Short Gloves, Black, White and Colors. Every Pair Double Tipped. All Sizes Here To-Day.

Remember your Fourth of July outfit last year, when you put it off till the last moment and had lots of trouble—so buy to-day.

Main Floor.

PRICE—50c, 75c and $1.00
Actual—75c $1 and $1.50 Value

Kaufmann & Company
Corner Fourth and Broad Streets.

Social and Personal

Mrs. J. Cloyd Kent and little daughter, Miss Charlotte Miller Kent, of this city, and Mrs. Hammond Johnston, of Norfolk, will leave next month to spend the summer together in Southwest Virginia. Mr. Kent will join them in August.

One of the most brilliant weddings of the season was solemnized in Lynchburg Thursday evening at 6 o'clock at St. Paul's Church, when Wyle Daniel Hodges was united in marriage with Miss Charlotte Saunders Clark, the impressive ceremony being performed by the Rev. Dr. Joseph B. Dunn, pastor of the church.

"O Perfect Love" was sung by the vested choir and A. W. Harned, organist, played "Salute d'Amour" previous to the entrance of the bride party. To the strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March the ribbon girls, little Misses Beale Minor Davis and Anne Faulkner, marched down the aisle followed by the ushers, Irvin Clark, Burkes Withers, of Norfolk, Jack Faulkner, H. G. McCausland, Thomas Dornin and Rawlings Hamner. Then came Miss Nannie Clark, bridesmaid, and Samuel Preston Strother, the groom, who was escorted by Mr. Richard Whaley, sister of the groom, of Norfolk; then the maid of honor, Miss Annie Clark, sister of the bride, who followed leaning on the arm of her father, Wyle P. Clark. They were met at

Dunlop Flour
IT'S MADE IN RICHMOND

The Dunlop Mills, Richmond, Va.

Special Desk Offer

We have a limited quantity of 5-lb. Standing Desks in solid oak, at the special price $15.00 net.

Sydnor & Hundley
Seventh and Grace Streets.

The Velvet Hand
Same Quality Every Day.
PURITY ICE CREAM
Monroe 1861.

DETROIT GAS RANGES,
ALASKA REFRIGERATORS,
OLD HICKORY FURNITURE,
SOLD ONLY BY

JURGENS
BIRTHDAY RINGS,
BRACELETS,
CAMEO BROOCHES.

Smith & Webster
805 East Main.

Rountree-Sutherland-Cherry Corporation
WE MAKE A SPECIALTY of packing household goods and china for shipment.

Ladies' Tan Rubber Sole
Oxfords, $2.25.

ALBERT STEIN
KING OF SHOES,
Corner 5th and Broad

REINACH, Inc.
107 E. BROAD STREET

MILLINERY—Women's and Misses' Outer Apparel.

See Our 1913 Patterns of GO-CARTS and CARRIAGES.

Rothert & Co.
Fourth and Broad.

HAMMOND
"Flowers of Guaranteed Freshness."

Tel. Mad. 630.

REINACH, Inc.
107 E. BROAD STREET

MILLINERY—Women's and Misses' Outer Apparel.

See Our 1913 Patterns of GO-CARTS and CARRIAGES.

Rothert & Co.
Fourth and Broad.

HAMMOND
"Flowers of Guaranteed Freshness."

Tel. Mad. 630.

Edward Skipwith Bruce, Robert Oliver Lehr and Edward Ayrault Robinson, Jr. is and out of town.

Mrs. Celeste Taylor continues very ill at her home on North Avenue, Barton Heights.

Miss Mary Garland Todd left yesterday to visit friends in Bowling Green.

Mrs. Joseph E. Willard is spending a few days in Washington.

W. W. Brown, of King George County, is visiting friends here.

Mrs. Taylor Burke has returned to her home in Alexandria, after a visit to Dr. and Mrs. Landon R. Mason.

Miss Mosselle Robins and Miss Sallie Hancock have returned from a visit to friends in Newport News.

Mrs. Ewing Eches and Miss Elizabeth Eches are leaving to-day to spend some time in Atlantic City.

Mrs. Violet Pace Johnston, of New York, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. James B. Pace, in this city.

Miss Mary Ball has returned from a visit to Alexandria.

Miss Janet Montague, who was operated on at St. Luke's Hospital last week, is doing well.

Mrs. Barton Haxall Wise and Miss Nell Wise are spending the summer months in Europe.

Miller-Steeptoe.
[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Lynchburg, Va., June 27.—Wednesday evening, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. Macdon Steeptoe, at Holcomb Rock, their daughter, Miss Mary Elizabeth Steeptoe, was married to George C. Miller, of this city. The home was beautifully decorated for the marriage, daisies and ferns predominating.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. T. M. McCormick, of Lynchburg. S. H. Wood, of Lynchburg, was best man, and Miss Sallie Steeptoe, a sister of the bride, was her maid of honor. Among the guests from a distance were T. C. Miller, Miss Sallie H. Miller, Miss Bessie Steeptoe, H. E. Steeptoe, and Stephen Wood, of Lynchburg; Mr. T. W. Oglesby, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Rucker, of Bonabon; W. T. Rucker, of Glasgow; T. C. Stratton, of Spout Springs; Miss Mary Abbott, Mrs. O. B. Stynes and Misses Louise, Emily and Mary Meriwether, of Bedford County.

Jennings—Phelps.
[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Lynchburg, Va., June 27.—At the Methodist Protestant parsonage Thursday Miss Mayme Gertrude Phelps, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Phelps, of Tyrocinna, was married to William Holly Jennings, of Roanoke. Rev. C. Morgan Compher, the pastor of that church, was the celebrant. Mr. and Mrs. Jennings went for a trip to Norfolk, and they will be at home in Roanoke after July 29, where the groom is connected with the Norfolk and Western Railway.

Negro Thief Sentenced.
[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Lynchburg, Va., June 27.—Ed Thomas, colored, was sentenced to eighteen months in prison here to-day on the charge of breaking into and entering the home of J. G. Overstreet.

Stops Falling Hair.
Hal's Hair Renewer certainly stops falling hair. No doubt about it whatever. You will surely be satisfied.

Hopkins Furniture Co.
7 West Broad St.
Cash or Credit.

THE FREED CO.
101 EAST BROAD STREET

The Latest in Ice Cream and Cakes from

Shepherd's New Factory
2008 W. Broad St. Call Mad. 7148

Dreyfus
"Specialists in Apparel for Women."

Broad at Second.

HAVE YOU SEEN THE

New Method Gas Ranges

— AT —

PETTIT & CO.'S?

Use Pratt's Astral Oil for Incubators.

N. Klein & Son, Inc.
3 East Broad.

Vacation Shoes in endless variety. Special prices on White Canvas Shoes and Pumps.

Hothelmer's
Northwest Corner Third and Broad.

Shades to Order at Ryan-Smith's

the Low Profit Policy Store

EAT IT THREE TIMES DAILY.

FATMOR BREAD
AT ALL GROCERS.

Count Adalbert Sternberg, who has just had his nose broken by an American coal-black negro, in a fracas in the Moulou Rouge Cafe, in the Kaiser-garten at Vienna, is said, in consequence of some slighting remark about the United States, is one of the most extraordinary figures in Austrian life, and merits some attention in this country, owing to his pronounced hostility to every American, the consequence of a stay of some months in the United States. He was formerly a member of the lower house of the Austrian legislature. His recollections of language were altogether phenomenal. He was in every sense of the word the enfant terrible of the Parliament, whose utterances were dreaded alike by friend and foe, and he was as frequently suspended as a measure of discipline, that his constituents finally determined to replace him by some one who would be in a position to more effectively represent their interests in the national assembly.

A few years ago he was not only deprived of his commission as an Austrian cavalry officer on the reserve list, but was even made the object of a general order on the part of the Minister of War, to the effect that he was incapable of granting satisfaction, namely, that owing to his irresponsibility and alleged dishonorable conduct, no one was under the necessity of either challenging him or accepting his challenge. In one word, he was barred from the so-called "honors." This is the only instance within the memory of the present generation of the issue, either in Austria or elsewhere in Europe, of an official general order such as this, which was equivalent to a sentence of social ostracism.

In 1911 this officer was reinstated by the Emperor, and Sternberg's commission was restored to him, largely as the result of the efforts exercised in his behalf by Prince Alfred, Duke of Metternich, who never made any secret of his belief that the court called upon to inquire into the charges of questionable conduct in connection with a gambling transaction, had allowed itself to be unduly influenced by political prejudices, and had condemned him unfairly. It was, thanks to this, that a new court was convened to reconsider the matter, which, dealing with it purely on its merits, completely cleared him.

Count Sternberg took advantage of this challenge not long afterwards Count Joseph Karelly, for having in the national legislature at Budapest spoken disparagingly of the Austrian army, was compared with that of Hungary, and sided with the latter as his opponent. Sternberg, who is a scion of one of the most illustrious houses of Europe, had as his second on that occasion, Prince Alfred Leichtenstein, who was the son-in-law of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, and Prince Leopold Croy, a nephew of Archduchess Isabella, to whom Count Sternberg himself is likewise related. Warm-hearted as it is just as easy to excite his sympathy to be unduly aroused. He is always attacking somebody or championing somebody's cause; very witty, very amusing, and with an extraordinary fund of anecdote, he is in many ways the counterpart of Derouville in France, and of Don Quixote in Spain.

Thus, the fate of the Boers appealed to his sympathies to such an extent that in spite of his commission on the reserve list of the Austrian army, he proceeded to Africa, and fought throughout the greater part of the conflict under the Boer flag. Falling into the hands of the English, he was so clever and eloquent in persuading his captors that he was merely a non-combatant Austrian nobleman and half-pay officer of the imperial army, endeavoring to pick up a few shillings, some experience of actual warfare, that he was set at liberty, allowed to proceed by rail to Capetown, and to embark there without let or hindrance for England, en route to Austria.

On reaching London he became acquainted with some members of Parliament, to whom he told the same story that he had related to the English general, by whom he had been captured. Not only did they believe him, but they were so much interested in his account of the military operations in the field, that they gave a dinner in the House of Commons in his honor. For the purpose of enabling him to meet Prime Minister Arthur Balfour and several other members of the administration.

It was while this banquet was in progress that the Premier was called away from the table, and informed that Sternberg had really been fighting under the Boer flag against the English. The Premier did not resume his place at the table, from which he hurriedly summoned his colleagues to the cabinet, and then caused the count to be informed that unless he left England by the first Continental train on the next morning, he would be arrested and shipped back to Africa as a prisoner of war. Sternberg left without further ado, and then came to the United States. After a six-months' stay here he returned to Austria and published a book, which is probably the most complimentary volume that has ever been printed about America.

(Copyright, 1913, by the Brentwood Company.)

Three Houses Destroyed.
[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Gettysburg, N. C., June 27.—An early morning fire in the southern part of the city destroyed three dwelling houses to-day belonging to Mrs. F. S. Sherman. A fourth house adjoining those burned was also badly damaged. The loss will be between $5,000 or $6,000, fully covered by insurance.

THALHIMERS
CLOAK AND FIFTH STS.

Men to Wait on Men

Saturday Sale of Men's Wear

Men's 50c Condo's Socks Underwear, the cool, long-wearing kind; sale price, 35c, or 3 garments for $1. Underwear, drawers knee length, sale price, 25c.

Men's $2.00 Secco Silk Shirts, in new patterns; Friday, $1.25.

Men's 25c Russian Cord Wash Ties, in hand-drawn line of patterns you were ever asked to see, 12 1/2c.

Black and Tan Leather Belts for all sizes; 50c values will be sold for 25c.

One lot of Men's 50c and 75c Underwear, various kinds and broken sizes, all new to-morrow will be 25c.

One lot of Men's 12 1/2c Socks, in purple, dark red and dark green; sale price, 3 pairs for 25c.

Wash Ties, a good 25c value; sale price 12 1/2c.

White and $1.25 and $1.50 Pajamas, in white and fancy stripe madras, trimmed with silk frogs; sale price 50c.

Men's Silk Flashed Hose, in tan, black, navy and gray, Hiale sole and high-grip heel; sale price will be 25c.

Men's 50c Balbriggan Underwear, sale price, 35c.

75c Cross Bar Underwear, drawers knee length, 50c.

One lot of Men's $1.50 Soft Silk Flashed Shirts, mostly dark, patterns; sale price, 85c.

Good, Full Cut White Cambric Night Robes, low neck; sale price, 50c.

Wonderful Shirt Values at 50c. Some of these sold for $1.00. None worth less than 75c.

One lot of 50 dozen Fancy Four-Hand Ties, all handsome, new patterns; sale price, 25c.

THIS NEW YORK WOMAN ANXIOUS FOR TITLE

Marries Alexis Karageorgevitch Without Obtaining King's Consent to Union.

BY LA MARQUE DE FONTENAY.

IF Mrs. Huger Pratt, of New York, nee Abigail Pankhurst, and divorced wife of W. J. Wright, of New York, was so anxious for a title as to marry Alexis Karageorgevitch, the other day in Paris, it is a pity that she did not arrange matters so as to obtain from King Peter his sovereign consent to the union. Far from sanctioning it, King Peter and his government opposed the match, and although Mme. Vessitch, the American wife of the Serbian envoy in the French capital, was an intimate friend of Mrs. Huger Pratt, neither she, nor yet the minister, was present at the wedding, nor took any cognizance thereof.

The family statutes of the royal house of Servia, enacted by the late King Leopold, and signed by King Peter, declare that the royal family consists of two branches, namely, the reigning and the nonreigning line. The former consists of the King, his two sons, George and Alexander, his daughter, Princess Helen, married to Prince John Constantinovich of Russia, his brother, Prince Arsene, and the latter's son, Prince Paul, a follow undergraduate of the Prince of Wales at Oxford. These are the legitimate heirs of the crown, and are entitled to the prefix of royal highness.

To the nonreigning branch belong Prince Alexis Karageorgevitch, who was over here ten years ago in a vain attempt to secure the hand of the daughter of one of the great metropolitans of the East, and Princess Sarka Karageorgevitch, his mother, the daughter of a major of the Serbian army, of the name of Micha Anastasavitch. Alexis and his mother, who are now in Paris, where they have lived in very straitened circumstances, by writing for newspapers and by painting menus, are only entitled to the predicate of highness.

The statutes further provide that no member of the royal family, be it of the reigning or the nonreigning branch, can contract any valid marriage without the sanction of the King in council. If he fails to obtain this permission, the marriage is not recognized as legal, either by the king or by any foreign court or government that is in diplomatic relations with Servia.

Any member of the house of Servia who, after obtaining permission of the King, contracts a marriage with a person of nonroyal or bourgeois birth, such as Legation Counselor Pratt, is required by law before the ceremony to renounce in the presence of the King, the Prime Minister, the president of the legislature, the president of the Council of State, and the Ministers of Justice and War, all rights, prerogatives and immunities, as a scion of the royal family. The King may, as an act of special grace, allow the member of his family entering upon a matrimonial alliance of this kind, to retain the princely title borne until then, but on the distinct understanding that under no circumstances will it be used by the children born thereof.

From this it is apparent that the marriage of Mrs. Huger Pratt to Prince Alexis Karageorgevitch is not recognized by the Servian crown and government, and that even if King Peter does relent and ultimately gives his consent to the marriage, the American wife of Alexis will never be able to lawfully share his princely title; in one word, that she will not be received at any court of Europe as Princess Alexis Karageorgevitch.

Alexis is a third cousin of King Peter, and no mention of his name is to be found in the pages of the Almanach de Gotha devoted to the enumeration of the reigning family of Servia.

Count Adalbert Sternberg, who has just had his nose broken by an American coal-black negro, in a fracas in the Moulou Rouge Cafe, in the Kaiser-garten at Vienna, is said, in consequence of some slighting remark about the United States, is one of the most extraordinary figures in Austrian life, and merits some attention in this country, owing to his pronounced hostility to every American, the consequence of a stay of some months in the United States. He was formerly a member of the lower house of the Austrian legislature. His recollections of language were altogether phenomenal. He was in every sense of the word the enfant terrible of the Parliament, whose utterances were dreaded alike by friend and foe, and he was as frequently suspended as a measure of discipline, that his constituents finally determined to replace him by some one who would be in a position to more effectively represent their interests in the national assembly.

A few years ago he was not only deprived of his commission as an Austrian cavalry officer on the reserve list, but was even made the object of a general order on the part of the Minister of War, to the effect that he was incapable of granting satisfaction, namely, that owing to his irresponsibility and alleged dishonorable conduct, no one was under the necessity of either challenging him or accepting his challenge. In one word, he was barred from the so-called "honors." This is the only instance within the memory of the present generation of the issue, either in Austria or elsewhere in Europe, of an official general order such as this, which was equivalent to a sentence of social ostracism.

In 1911 this officer was reinstated by the Emperor, and Sternberg's commission was restored to him, largely as the result of the efforts exercised in his behalf by Prince Alfred, Duke of Metternich, who never made any secret of his belief that the court called upon to inquire into the charges of questionable conduct in connection with a gambling transaction, had allowed itself to be unduly influenced by political prejudices, and had condemned him unfairly. It was, thanks to this, that a new court was convened to reconsider the matter, which, dealing with it purely on its merits, completely cleared him.

Count Sternberg took advantage of this challenge not long afterwards Count Joseph Karelly, for having in the national legislature at Budapest spoken disparagingly of the Austrian army, was compared with that of Hungary, and sided with the latter as his opponent. Sternberg, who is a scion of one of the most illustrious houses of Europe, had as his second on that occasion, Prince Alfred Leichtenstein, who was the son-in-law of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, and Prince Leopold Croy, a nephew of Archduchess Isabella, to whom Count Sternberg himself is likewise related. Warm-hearted as it is just as easy to excite his sympathy to be unduly aroused. He is always attacking somebody or championing somebody's cause; very witty, very amusing, and with an extraordinary fund of anecdote, he is in many ways the counterpart of Derouville in France, and of Don Quixote in Spain.

Thus, the fate of the Boers appealed to his sympathies to such an extent that in spite of his commission on the reserve list of the Austrian army, he proceeded to Africa, and fought throughout the greater part of the conflict under the Boer flag. Falling into the hands of the English, he was so clever and eloquent in persuading his captors that he was merely a non-combatant Austrian nobleman and half-pay officer of the imperial army, endeavoring to pick up a few shillings, some experience of actual warfare, that he was set at liberty, allowed to proceed by rail to Capetown, and to embark there without let or hindrance for England, en route to Austria.

On reaching London he became acquainted with some members of Parliament, to whom he told the same story that he had related to the English general, by whom he had been captured. Not only did they believe him, but they were so much interested in his account of the military operations in the field, that they gave a dinner in the House of Commons in his honor. For the purpose of enabling him to meet Prime Minister Arthur Balfour and several other members of the administration.

It was while this banquet was in progress that the Premier was called away from the table, and informed that Sternberg had really been fighting under the Boer flag against the English. The Premier did not resume his place at the table, from which he hurriedly summoned his colleagues to the cabinet, and then caused the count to be informed that unless he left England by the first Continental train on the next morning, he would be arrested and shipped back to Africa as a prisoner of war. Sternberg left without further ado, and then came to the United States. After a six-months' stay here he returned to Austria and published a book, which is probably the most complimentary volume that has ever been printed about America.

present their interests in the national assembly.

A few years ago he was not only deprived of his commission as an Austrian cavalry officer on the reserve list, but was even made the object of a general order on the part of the Minister of War, to the effect that he was incapable of granting satisfaction, namely, that owing to his irresponsibility and alleged dishonorable conduct, no one was under the necessity of either challenging him or accepting his challenge. In one word, he was barred from the so-called "honors." This is the only instance within the memory of the present generation of the issue, either in Austria or elsewhere in Europe, of an official general order such as this, which was equivalent to a sentence of social ostracism.

In 1911 this officer was reinstated by the Emperor, and Sternberg's commission was restored to him, largely as the result of the efforts exercised in his behalf by Prince Alfred, Duke of Metternich, who never made any secret of his belief that the court called upon to inquire into the charges of questionable conduct in connection with a gambling transaction, had allowed itself to be unduly influenced by political prejudices, and had condemned him unfairly. It was, thanks to this, that a new court was convened to reconsider the matter, which, dealing with it purely on its merits, completely cleared him.

Count Sternberg took advantage of this challenge not long afterwards Count Joseph Karelly, for having in the national legislature at Budapest spoken disparagingly of the Austrian army, was compared with that of Hungary, and sided with the latter as his opponent. Sternberg, who is a scion of one of the most illustrious houses of Europe, had as his second on that occasion, Prince Alfred Leichtenstein, who was the son-in-law of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, and Prince Leopold Croy, a nephew of Archduchess Isabella, to whom Count Sternberg himself is likewise related. Warm-hearted as it is just as easy to excite his sympathy to be unduly aroused. He is always attacking somebody or championing somebody's cause; very witty, very amusing, and with an extraordinary fund of anecdote, he is in many ways the counterpart of Derouville in France, and of Don Quixote in Spain.

Thus, the fate of the Boers appealed to his sympathies to such an extent that in spite of his commission on the reserve list of the Austrian army, he proceeded to Africa, and fought throughout the greater part of the conflict under the Boer flag. Falling into the hands of the English, he was so clever and eloquent in persuading his captors that he was merely a non-combatant Austrian nobleman and half-pay officer of the imperial army, endeavoring to pick up a few shillings, some experience of actual warfare, that he was set at liberty, allowed to proceed by rail to Capetown, and to embark there without let or hindrance for England, en route to Austria.

On reaching London he became acquainted with some members of Parliament, to whom he told the same story that he had related to the English general, by whom he had been captured. Not only did they believe him, but they were so much interested in his account of the military operations in the field, that they gave a dinner in the House of Commons in his honor. For the purpose of enabling him to meet Prime Minister Arthur Balfour and several other members of the administration.

It was while this banquet was in progress that the Premier was called away from the table, and informed that Sternberg had really been fighting under the Boer flag against the English. The Premier did not resume his place at the table, from which he hurriedly summoned his colleagues to the cabinet, and then caused the count to be informed that unless he left England by the first Continental train on the next morning, he would be arrested and shipped back to Africa as a prisoner of war. Sternberg left without further ado, and then came to the United States. After a six-months' stay here he returned to Austria and published a book, which is probably the most complimentary volume that has ever been printed about America.

Count Adalbert Sternberg, who has just had his nose broken by an American coal-black negro, in a fracas in the Moulou Rouge Cafe, in the Kaiser-garten at Vienna, is said, in consequence of some slighting remark about the United States, is one of the most extraordinary figures in Austrian life, and merits some attention in this country, owing to his pronounced hostility to every American, the consequence of a stay of some months in the United States. He was formerly a member of the lower house of the Austrian legislature. His recollections of language were altogether phenomenal. He was in every sense of the word the enfant terrible of the Parliament, whose utterances were dreaded alike by friend and foe, and he was as frequently suspended as a measure of discipline, that his constituents finally determined to replace him by some one who would be in a position to more effectively represent their interests in the national assembly.

A few years ago he was not only deprived of his commission as an Austrian cavalry officer on the reserve list, but was even made the object of a general order on the part of the Minister of War, to the effect that he was incapable of granting satisfaction, namely, that owing to his irresponsibility and alleged dishonorable conduct, no one was under the necessity of either challenging him or accepting his challenge. In one word, he was barred from the so-called "honors." This is the only instance within the memory of the present generation of the issue, either in Austria or elsewhere in Europe, of an official general order such as this, which was equivalent to a sentence of social ostracism.

In 1911 this officer was reinstated by the Emperor, and Sternberg's commission was restored to him, largely as the result of the efforts exercised in his behalf by Prince Alfred, Duke of Metternich, who never made any secret of his belief that the court called upon to inquire into the charges of questionable conduct in connection with a gambling transaction, had allowed itself to be unduly influenced by political prejudices, and had condemned him unfairly. It was, thanks to this, that a new court was convened to reconsider the matter, which, dealing with it purely on its merits, completely cleared him.

Count Sternberg took advantage of this challenge not long afterwards Count Joseph Karelly, for having in the national legislature at Budapest spoken disparagingly of the Austrian army, was compared with that of Hungary, and sided with the latter as his opponent. Sternberg, who is a scion of one of the most illustrious houses of Europe, had as his second on that occasion, Prince Alfred Leichtenstein, who was the son-in-law of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, and Prince Leopold Croy, a nephew of Archduchess Isabella, to whom Count Sternberg himself is likewise related. Warm-hearted as it is just as easy to excite his sympathy to be unduly aroused. He is always attacking somebody or championing somebody's cause; very witty, very amusing, and with an extraordinary fund of anecdote, he is in many ways the counterpart of Derouville in France, and of Don Quixote in Spain.

Thus, the fate of the Boers appealed to his sympathies to such an extent that in spite of his commission on the reserve list of the Austrian army, he proceeded to Africa, and fought throughout the greater part of the conflict under the Boer flag. Falling into the hands of the English, he was so clever and eloquent in persuading his captors that he was merely a non-combatant Austrian nobleman and half-pay officer of the imperial army, endeavoring to pick up a few shillings, some experience of actual warfare, that he was set at liberty, allowed to proceed by rail to Capetown, and to embark there without let or hindrance for England, en route to Austria.

On reaching London he became acquainted with some members of Parliament, to whom he told the same story that he had related to the English general, by whom he had been captured. Not only did they believe him, but they were so much interested in his account of the military operations in the field, that they gave a dinner in the House of Commons in his honor. For the purpose of enabling him to meet Prime Minister Arthur Balfour and several other members of the administration.

It was while this banquet was in progress that the Premier was called away from the table, and informed that Sternberg had really been fighting under the Boer flag against the English. The Premier did not resume his place at the table, from which he hurriedly summoned his colleagues to the cabinet, and then caused the count to be informed that unless he left England by the first Continental train on the next morning, he would be arrested and shipped back to Africa as a prisoner of war. Sternberg left without further ado, and then came to the United States. After a six-months' stay here he returned to Austria and published a book, which is probably the most complimentary volume that has ever been printed about America.

Count Adalbert Sternberg, who has just had his nose broken by an American coal-black negro, in a fracas in the Moulou Rouge Cafe, in the Kaiser-garten at Vienna, is said, in consequence of some slighting remark about the United States, is one of the most extraordinary figures in Austrian life, and merits some attention in this country, owing to his pronounced hostility to every American, the consequence of a stay of some months in the United States. He was formerly a member of the lower house of the Austrian legislature. His recollections of language were altogether phenomenal. He was in every sense of the word the enfant terrible of the Parliament, whose utterances were dreaded alike by friend and foe, and he was as frequently suspended as a measure of discipline, that his constituents finally determined to replace him by some one who would be in a position to more effectively represent their interests in the national assembly.

REACH AGREEMENT ON APPOINTMENTS

Winston for District Attorney, Bailey for Assistant and Dortch for Collector.

SLATE BELIEVED